

Coral Springs Named ‘Most Underrated Town in Florida’

September 3, 2018 by Sharon Aron Baron No Comments

Downtown area. Photo courtesy City of Coral Springs.

By: Sharon Aron Baron

Rated tops in commerce, art and beauty, Coral Springs was named the “Most Underrated Town in Florida” by an online magazine.

In a search for nominations, House Method conducted weeks of research, took national submissions, and evaluated more than 500 nominations to create a list of underrated towns across the U.S. – and Coral Springs made the tops for Florida.

According to Brand Editor Emily McCrary-Ruiz-Esparza, Coral Springs made the list because it is a place that could supply good jobs for residents, has an interesting art scene, and is a place where people would want to live and visit. More importantly, it had that “surprise” factor. House Method loved its family friendliness paired with its close proximity to large cities and beaches.

“Composed of sprawling suburbs, amazing schools, and restaurants on nearly every corner, this town is the perfect place to raise a family or simply unwind. Take in the natural beauty of the Everglades or enjoy a riveting performance at the Coral Springs Center for the Arts—a space dedicated to the modern fusion of music, dance, and comedy, with events including dynamic shows, concerts, and festivals,” the article read.

Other cities include: Santa Maria Valley, California, Peachtree City, Georgia, Bangor, Maine, Marshfield, Massachusetts, Rochester, New York and Park City, Utah.

House Method, a home and garden site, was founded in August, 2017.